

Canadians Must Rally Full Strength To Hold Empire's Front Line, Ralston States

OTTAWA, Jan. 27.—(CP)—To help hold the front line of empire "During the previous days and weeks ahead" will call for the united strength and most unflinching energy the Canadian people can muster, Defense Minister Ralston said Sunday night in an address over the national network of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

The minister, who returned to the capital on Friday after a visit to the United Kingdom lasting nearly two months, described his mission as "most informing and stimulating" and expressed every hope his results would prove successful.

"I never had the shadow of doubt regarding the justice of the cause in which we have joined battle. And the necessity of victory. If we are to save this Dominion," Colonel Ralston said.

MUST BE HELD
"I come back with determination deepened and strengthened to help in every way I can in this fight which is Canada's fight as well as Britain's. I cannot emphasize too strongly that, while the front line of that fight is, fortunately for us, still in the British Isles, it is our front line and the front line of North America and that it must be held at all costs."

It was generally acknowledged that Canada's war activities were fairly well geared into those of the United Kingdom, the minister said, there had emerged a common agreement that no chance in Canada's policy was called for.

It was more a matter of timing and the detailed nature of the Dominion's participation that had been considered in the light of plans and conditions abroad.

FACING PERIL
"It was gratifying to hear from the prime minister (Mr. Churchill) and from his colleagues appreciation of what Canada is doing," Col. Ralston continued. "We made it clear, however, that Canada would not be content with anything less than the most effective co-operation possible to discharge the responsibilities which she had voluntarily taken on, but which she regards as her own in the face of the peril threatening free democracy which is the foundation of this Dominion."

The minister said that among the most inspiring experiences of his trip had been his visit to the Canadian forces.

That their long months of training had been fruitful was evident, he said, by their bearing and spirit and the confidence they possessed in themselves and in their comrades of all ranks.

NO ILLUSIONS
"As one who remembers the Canadian Corps of 1918, I feel that no greater tribute could be paid to Canada's army of 1940 than to say what I sincerely believe, that they are the stuff which will live up to the very best traditions of the Canadian Corps of Vimy, Passchendaele, Arras, and Valenciennes."

The defence minister said Canadian overseas had no illusions regarding a short war and whatever anxieties they had, the foremost was their desire to come to grips with the enemy and to finish the job.

The minister paid a personal tribute to the Canadian corps commander, Lt.-Gen. A. G. L. McNaughton, and his subordinate officers.

"I have the utmost confidence in these leaders of our men," he said. Col. Ralston said he had also had an opportunity of seeing something of the activities of Canada's naval forces in British waters and her gallant service as well.

Some of you may be thinking that I have worked myself into a state of what is so often called complacency about our naval, military and air forces in Britain," the minister remarked.

Far from it, I am not completely satisfied of course. I found on my trip things which had to be improved and no time will be lost in improving them. But that does not detract one whit from what I feel and about the outstanding qualities generally of the officers and men of the Canadian forces."

PEOPLES ORdeal
Col. Ralston, who spent much of his time in London and went through some of the most devastating raids in recent months, painted a grim picture of the ordeal the civilian population is enduring.

There, he said, was a life of constant peril, of rubble debris to old and young, at their daily tasks at home, by day and by night. Through all the months of attack, through the assaults of Viking, Hun, Dane, Saxon or Norman, Rome had been as gloriously brutal as that which the British people suffered today.

Conventry, Bristol, Southampton, Birmingham, Liverpool and many other cities had learned the wanton cruelty of the Hun, and there was only one answer, London's liege response: "We can take it."

"We will win this fight for freedom," Col. Ralston declared. "And the reason we will win it is not because we are so, but because Canada as well as Britain and all those associated with her will step up to nothing which can effectively be done to ensure the overthrow of Nazism which threatens us as it threatens the world."

High Praise Is Given Canadians For Rescue Work

LONDON, Jan. 27.—(CP)—Members of a Canadian machine-gun battalion stationed somewhere in England are receiving high praise for their display of bravery during a recent air raid.

Despite the fact flames were raging through the debris of a bombed hospital, the Canadian ran into the shattered building, rescued six injured persons and then aided an organized rescue crew in digging out other trapped persons.

The work of the Canadians was praised by many letters received by Lt.-Gen. A. G. L. McNaughton, Corps Commander.

U.S. Congressman Kenneth Simpson Passes Suddenly

NEW YORK, Jan. 27.—(AP)—Death at the early age of 43 has cut the United States Republican party one of its most unorthodox but effective leaders—Representative Kenneth F. Simpson, who helped swing the 1940 Republican presidential nomination to Wendell Willkie.

The Mississippi-born former national committeeman, serving his first term in elective office, died unexpectedly at his home Saturday night of a heart ailment which friends said had been brought on by overwork in the last campaign.

LOCK UP MY HEART

CHAPTER NINETEEN
MARK CHENEY—Cam turned his head away and never in his mind.

Then she knew—knew why she had been driven to seek him out to follow him when he suddenly fled from the Turf Ball—solidly invaded his guarded grounds and practically had forced her way into his house.

Mark had been puzzled by her motive, too, and when he had questioned her, she felt suddenly confused she hadn't been able to answer truthfully, even to herself. But now she knew. She was in love with him.

The sudden realization brought a glow which sent the blood surging through every vein in her body. Love was the explanation—but curiosity she had supposed.

IN LOVE

She thought she must have fallen in love with him when she first saw him on the train, it must have been love that had sharpened her perception that she saw clearly the deception that men who had known Joe Raymond for years had failed to see.

But with her excited discovery she had track of time and distance and she started up as though awakened from a sound sleep when she felt Murphy stand on her arm and heard his voice saying "Here's the Ambassador, Mark."

"Oh," she exclaimed. "Already?"

"I thought you were asleep," the detective said in a more moderate tone. "I didn't mean to startle you."

"Thank for bringing me."

She slipped from the car and without looking back, hurried into the hotel and back to the bathroom.

Frank had made sure that the champagne liberally supplied to the table didn't go to waste, as he greeted Cam a trifle noisily as she slid into her chair.

"Didn't know whether you were coming back or not," he said. "Where've you been anyway?"

She couldn't say that anything would be gained by telling him.

where she had been, and evened the question.

"Oh! for some air—it got pretty stuffy in here, you know."

"Look, you must've got enough air to last you for a week. You've been gone nearly two hours. Did you know that?"

"I'm sorry, Frank. I was thoughtful of me."

"Some guys would get sore if I got pulled a stunt like that on 'em, but not me. I don't get sore very easy. Besides, I been having a pretty good time. Ben dancing with Lisa."

"That gave him an idea."

"Sure you didn't follow him when he left here in such a hurry, did you?"

"I said I went out for some fresh air."

"This Lisa—Lucia told me Cheney got a sudden business call and had to leave. Seemed a bit queer, but I don't at first, but she seems to be having a good time anyway. Guess he's left her in charge of the party so she's gotta stay. She's a neat floss to do a number."

"You find her attractive, do you?"

"Very attractive." Frank answered, and then added hastily, and disavowingly, "but of course not as attractive as you." By a terrific effort he concentrated on his companion. "You're darned pretty at this time of night."

"Not too smart," Cam murmured, half to herself. Frank turned to hear an announcement by the master of ceremonies, and then, apparently, vigorously as the orchestra started a lively tune and a line of dancers dashed onto the floor to do a number.

"No," the girl told herself. "I won't want very smart to fall in love with a man like Mark Cheney. If I had'n accidentally stumbled into the midst of this Joe Raymond trouble, I'd never have seen a second thought and he isn't as good as he gets things straightened out. Why couldn't I fall in love with a man like Frank? He's intelligent, and an excellent companion."

Why couldn't I fall in love with a man like Frank? He's intelligent, and an excellent companion."

"Not too smart," Cam murmured, half to herself. Frank turned to hear an announcement by the master of ceremonies, and then, apparently, vigorously as the orchestra started a lively tune and a line of dancers dashed onto the floor to do a number.
